The construction of the Phnom Penh high-speed railway construction is planned to cost about $4 billion and will take about four years to build.

Yesterday, Senior Minister Sun Chanthol, Minister of Public Works and Transport, chaired a meeting to review the preliminary results of a feasibility study on the project to upgrade the Phnom Penh-Poipet Northern Railway to a high-speed railway by China Road and Bridge Corporation (CRBC).

In the presentation, CRBC representatives presented the main points of study to the meeting, including: Project Overview; Economic and Traffic Analysis; Plan of Construction; Basic technical standards of the railway; Transportation arrangements; Total construction and investment period; Financial assessment and Clarification of key issues.

According to the preliminary study, the project has a total length of 382 km and requires an investment of more than $4 billion.

Chanthol raised some important points to clarify some important points as a basis for the meeting with Deputy Prime Minister Hun Pormmoniroth, Minister of Economy and Finance, which will be taking place on January 30.
